Culture(s) and Authenticity

The Politics of Translation and the Poetics of Imitation

This book critically analyzes various means by which the authentic is searched for, staged, admired, dismissed, replicated or simply taken for granted. What is at work in such discursive practices is a poetics of imitation. This is seen as a paradoxical kind of poetics which renounces the authenticity of the created text.

At the origins of Classical opera

Carlo Goldoni and the dramma giocoso per musica

Perhaps because of his stature and influence as a comic playwright, Goldoni has rarely been considered as an innovator in the musical sphere. This study aims to shed new light on his primary role in the evolution of Classical opera, and on the legacy of his innovations in the European musical tradition.

Monstruosidad y escepticismo barroco en la España Imperial Este trabajo explora el papel de la monstruosidad barroca como catalizadora de los cambios en los sistemas de pensamiento del siglo XVII. Esta encarna el horror, es escepticismo y la perplejidad frente a una naturaleza enigmática que se resiste al ser codificada. El corpus estudiado incluye teatro, poesía, libros médicos y de filosofía natural.

Sociology of the Invisible Hand

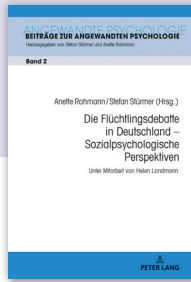

The book illustrates the applicability of the metaphor of the invisible hand in modern sociological theory and shows that sociologists have been part of a field mainly associated with economists/political philosophers. It describes the traditional and contemporary applicability of the sociological framing of the invisible hand for social sciences.

Unknown God, Known in His Activities

Incomprehensibility of God during the Trinitarian Controversy of the 4th Century

This book deals with the 4th-century Trinitarian controversy, which had a profound impact on negative theology. Eunomius claimed that we can know both the substance (ousia) and activities (energeiai) of God, whereas Cappadocians demonstrated the incomprehensibility of God's essence, and the possibility of knowing his external activities.
